Nodus CD-Key Manager With License Code [32|64bit]

• Lists applications by product code, license type, description and file size. • Has a built-in paste function, where you can paste your activation code with a hotkey of your choice. • Has a built-in save function, that will auto-protect your lists from being edited by third parties. • Has a built-in password function, that will protect your activation codes from being viewed by third parties. • Can perform a remote installation • Can import list from AutoIt, without the need to install AutoIt. • Imports lists from several list file formats, including BXML, XML, CSV and XML. • Allows users to add special codes (e.g. for Software Protection keys). • Requires WinXP or newer Nodus CD-Key Manager Serial Key is designed to help users in keeping all of their activation codes in just one place. The program also features a built-in special paste function (customizable with its very own hotkey), that can be used to automatically insert the activation code of the selected entry. Populating the list is done manually In essence, the program is an activation codes agenda, keeping track of all CD-Keys. The process is by no means automatic, and users need to create the entries manually. On computers with tens of registered applications, the process can get quite tedious. In this sense, a nice feature would be if the utility would automatically fill the list with all the installed software, from which users could then discard free or unwanted applications. Lists can be protected with a password Another interesting function of Nodus CD-Key Manager is that it can save and password-protect the lists. Since registration information is sensible in nature, and the program essentially gathers all these codes in just one place, protecting the user's work with a password is a necessity. A dedicated paste function Once the list has been populated, with a simple hotkey users can insert the product activation passkey of the selected entry. By default, the hotkey does not overwrite the standard Ctrl + V paste combination or mechanics, which means the software does not interfere with clipboard operations. An overall interesting utility, with space for improvement This program will greatly benefit users that have many registered applications and wish to keep all their codes in just one place. Casual users that do not have this configuration, or that rely on freeware, can skip this software. Nodus CD-Key Manager is designed to help users in keeping all
