Incidence.Thursday, April 28, 2008 Sweets & Snacks at the Awesome Trader Joe's in Historic Downtown San Diego The first Trader Joe's was only in Pasadena. Founded in 1968 by legendary California grocer and developer Joe Coulombe, it was initially called "Food Emporium" and went on to grow into a chain that now contains more than 120 locations nationwide. When it first started in San Diego, a smaller and older sister store called Riverside Market was not far away from the company's first flagship in Pasadena. But instead of focusing on Riverside Market, Trader Joe's has chosen to focus exclusively on the commercial market (and a few mom and pop stores). But the company that started out with a handful of stores on the west coast in the late 1960's, has now grown into a hyper casual upscale grocery store that is already expanding to locations across San Diego's Gaslamp district. The first store opened a little over a year ago at the foot of the Vizcaya building, right across from the Fremont Hotel. Now, a second location has opened in a former music venue, the club The Casbah, in the Gaslamp District. And a third location has opened in the historic Old Globe. I am a huge fan of Trader Joe's. Almost all of my friends are fans of the Trader Joe's gourmet food selection. The store is well organized and well laid out, with reasonable and well marked prices. The company doesn't even hide the prices so shoppers don't have to bargain-hunt for the best deals. Even when I walk into the store, the prices are listed right on the display for the prices. Because of the clubby feel of the small store (which by no means is a bad thing), I sometimes feel like I am shopping for a big box store when I go there. But there are some areas of the store that don
