Years later, they gave birth to their children and moved again to the East Coast to live in a bigger house with more space for their children. They began with their daughter's first piano lesson and moved on to her violin. Her violin playing has grown and now she is a teen!They recently moved to a new apartment building and it's quiet there. The surrounding neighbourhoods have some mountains which are all lit up during the winter with many Christmas lights.It's very convenient since their daughter can walk to school on the same street where her violin lessons take place. The parents enjoy biking and walking around their neighbourhood and occasionally go on hikes to visit nearby waterfalls.I've finally finished this art post after taking longer than I anticipated to make this. I originally wanted to do a collage of photos of the parents and their family, but I think it's too crowded and jumbled. They have all the best poses in their home photos since they are posed in their living room. Anyways, I hope you like this! court took another step today toward exonerating small-time home-entrepreneurs from the crackdown on illegal telemarketing (the subject of this week's script): The 2nd Circuit vacated an $800,000 judgment against a father and son who allegedly lured tens of thousands of unsuspecting consumers into signing up for a direct-deposit account with an affiliate bank. Because the bank was a small affiliate of the larger Wells Fargo bank, the Telemarketing Act said they were violating the regulation. I don't know how many people who read this blog will be familiar with the controversy
