If you use it normally it means you have set it up properly. First setup make sure you select a printer on your machine in the list... and then set the time for the "break time". If you dont want it to run anymore when you leave your house, you can uncheck the Start in a new window option in the Options Dialog or you can even remove the application completly from your system in the Add/Remove Programs control panel in the control panel. Q: Simple jar file doesn't find library I have project A, which uses B and C classes. A is a jar file, B is a regular project. And C is a library, that should be seen and used by B, but it is not actually in the B project. Here's the situation: Project A: Build is setted to "Package project for deployment to a JAR file". Deployable packaging type is setted to "JAR" Output type is setted to "One file". Project B Build is setted to "Java Application". The "Output jar file" is setted to "Project A\dist\ProjectA.jar" Project C Build is setted to "Compile only to Java classes" Project A dependencies setted in project B (Project C) Now, here is the problem: If I run Project A jar from command line, it works without problems, however, if I make a build for Project B (Java Application), all libraries that I have in Project C are not found. I mean I call B.findLibrary("[L....path...lib/path.jar]") and I get null, instead of Jar containing the right class. However, when I run Project A jar from command line, it works as it should. How to fix this? A: I strongly recommend to read the comments

The Bed's Printer Switcher is a little program that has been designed to work with our Bed's range of bed sensors and remote switches. It will change your printer back to the default settings after the bed has been moved, removing the need to manually set the printer up after any bed moves. It also has the option to exit automatically after a set amount of time without any further input from the user.There were no signs that they were more than typical tourists, but a fishing duo had a close encounter with a strange creature while out on the open sea. The pair were staying at a hotel at the idyllic Long Beach, California, and managed to capture the moment on video as they apparently spotted something lurking in the nearby waters. The fisherman, who chose to remain anonymous, told The Mirror: "I didn't recognize it at first. I thought it was maybe a dolphin. It swam up to us. And it started to shake its tail when we swam up to it. The water started to bubble. "I swam over to it and it didn't come closer. It just swam away. I thought maybe it was a whale at first but it didn't have a dorsal fin. It's like a fin at the end of its tail but it's definitely not a whale. "We both thought that was weird. I don't think anyone else in the hotel knew what we were seeing." The video soon went viral online and has garnered more than 620,000 views. "My wife and I were on the beach one night at Long Beach and we saw something swimming very close to us underwater," wrote one Facebook user. "We swam towards it and it turned out to be a sea creature so bizarre. It kept flashing bright green in color." Another commenter added: "Dude, that was a fucking sea lion, man. I've seen them in the ocean before." A woman said: "It is very rare but not impossible to find. I was swimming in a pretty remote area and picked up a large flat bottomed fish. It was in a crevice of the rocks and I was trying to get a picture but when I did, this really huge sea lion came up right in my face and he would not leave. I couldn't believe it.
