AutoCAD Crack For Windows is one of the most widely used CAD software applications in the world, with current and potential users numbering in the billions. According to one estimate, the user base of AutoCAD Cracked Accounts software in 2018 reached over 125 million, and AutoCAD revenue from 2018 has been estimated at $5.5 billion. Thanks to the application's broad adoption, AutoCAD has become the most used CAD software application by companies of all sizes, from the automotive industry to large chemical manufacturers. For these reasons, AutoCAD has become a target of the malware industry, and the Autodesk website offers security-related information on the AutoCAD application, including advice on how to remove any "malware" that may have been installed on a machine. The earliest versions of AutoCAD and similar applications suffered from some minor security issues, and several anti-malware software tools were released to remove the problems at the time. Since then, AutoCAD and other CAD software have largely been updated with security enhancements, and the vast majority of issues reported by users are caused by installation issues, improperly configured programs, or malware. Background of AutoCAD AutoCAD was first released in December 1982 and received widespread adoption in the 3D CAD industry. One reason for its wide adoption is that its early users included Autodesk employees and researchers who were familiar with the new software, leading to an early adoption in the CAD market. Historically, most CAD software was used for drafting and manufacturing, with a small minority of professional CAD software users developing and editing technical drawings, such as electrical, hydraulic, and gas pipelines. AutoCAD and other CAD software were aimed at the technical engineer, designer, and draftsman who produced such work. The original AutoCAD software was very basic, and some of the functionality that was added over time required the use of plug-ins or external add-ins that provided those features. Over time, the base feature set of AutoCAD has increased and changed as the application has evolved, and there are now many add-ins available. This has contributed to AutoCAD's wide adoption, as AutoCAD is generally regarded as the most widely used CAD software application on the market. By the early 1990s, 3D CAD was becoming the norm in the industry, and the number of CAD operators began to exceed the number of mainframe and minicomputer computers that were used by CAD operators. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of commercial software for use in computerized accounting systems, and, in particular, to a method, system and program product for providing a “user-friendly” website for use in a computerized accounting system to facilitate data entry and transaction processing in the system. 2. Description of the Related Art The current practice of most business enterprises is to electronically store and process various financial data using commercially available accounting programs. Many of these programs are written in a programming language or a related environment, such as Java, that is not readily accessible to a typical business user. Instead, these programs tend to be written for “engineers,” not for people who are familiar with and prefer to operate on a business level of data. As a result, most business users are not able to customize the data processing programs to suit their particular business needs. Instead, they must laboriously modify the programs to meet their needs. In addition, the output of these accounting programs typically is in a form that requires a high degree of expertise on the part of the person operating the program. Further, even when data is entered into the program and processed for output, the output of the program is often in a form that is different from the input of the data. This discrepancy in data output formats increases the cost of processing by the user, and increases the need for interpretation of the data by the user. Thus, a need exists for an improved accounting system and associated data processing method, system and software product.
