I have a C# console app that reads in a.csv file line by line, and stores each line in a Dictionary, and then processes the keys and values for that line, and at the end, outputs the key/value pairs in order, comma-separated. The csv file has a header line and then several body lines, and the header line happens to be the first line. So, I read the header into a variable, then use a ternary operator to check if the line is the body line. If it's the body line, I use a for loop to add the value of a variable to a string, then output the keys and values into the console. This works fine. The problem is, the code tries to use the value of the header line as the initial value of that variable, but it fails and ends 0cc13bf012

I'm currently building an API for my rails app. At this point the API is all good. The data is being stored correctly. It's returned in the correct format and it all works. My next step is to actually return the resource to the user. I will have the ability to do a edit for a specific resource in the API. They will then be able to update a specific resource, but i'm not sure if i should just create a new resource where I store the fields they wish to edit. Or should I just create a new model that will hold the association of the fields that they wish to edit. A: I usually do the former. That is, I create a new resource which will allow them to update the data in the database. I will have two action (GET and POST), one to get the data of the resource that will be edited. The other one to do the POST request. /* TODO */ import app from '././app'; import { readFile, writeFile, } from './fs'; async function write_db(db, table, file, content, remove) { let last = file; if (remove) file = file.replace(/^(last/, ''); let rs = await db.query('SELECT last FROM ` ` + table + ` ` ORDER BY id DESC LIMIT 1;'); if (remove) { last = rs.rows[0].last; } else { last = ''; } file = file + 'last' + ((' ' || rs.rows[0].last).replace(/ +$/g, '')) + ' '; await writeFile(file, content); return file; } async function update_db(db, table, id, content, remove) { let file = await readFile(
