work, prosecutors' decision-making, and the witness testimony that led to a charge are all factors that the jury must weigh in order to arrive at a verdict. These factors include not only the evidence presented at trial but also societal perceptions. The Supreme Court has recognized that the jury is "the lie detector" that adjudicates guilt. Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333,

351 (1966). Witnesses are often motivated by fear of prosecution and retribution, and likewise, prosecutors are concerned about the costs and hazards of prosecuting someone. See id. (“Many witnesses, even those present at the scene of a crime, will reasonably fear to come forward and testify.”). The jury is charged with upholding the standard of proof beyond a
