Field of the Invention This invention relates to a shock wave-radiation medical treatment apparatus capable of performing shock wave therapy and then performing radiology diagnosis. 2. Description of the Prior Art In the treatment of disease in the human body, there is known a method called "acoustic radiation force produced by shock wave". In this method, an electric signal in the form of a burst of a short duration is applied to a living body to produce shock waves in the living body so that a scattered reflected wave is generated in the living body which is then subjected to radiology diagnosis to obtain an image from a point of view of energy. This is described in, for instance, U.S. Pat. No. 3,747,412. In this method, shock waves are generated by a shock tube which has a diaphragm member on a side wall thereof, as described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,747,412. More recently, in order to promote blood circulation in the human body, there is developed a technique of pulsating radiation of acoustic waves which is described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,769,732 and 3,890,953. In general, a patient lays down on an examination table to be irradiated by radiation from a shock wave-radiation medical treatment apparatus, or on a water bed in a radiology room. Therefore, the patient is not laid down on a couch to be irradiated by pulsating radiation. Therefore, such a patient has not been satisfactorily examined because of the following reasons. First, the shock tube described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,747,412 is usually supported by a tripod and becomes bulky. Therefore, it is inconvenient to carry the apparatus in the medical treatment room. Second, when the shock tube is supported on an examination table, the shock tube may be moved out of position, or the position of the shock tube may be tilted to give discomfort to the patient. A large number of recent studies have focused on the dynamic interactions between substrate tRNA and enzyme in a wide variety of biological functions. For this study, we performed molecular dynamics (MD) simulations to analyze the interactions of the active site of aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase from E. coli (E.c.) with one cognate and one noncognate tRNA, based on the crystal structure and the solution structure, respectively. The results showed that the active site of E.c. aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase not only interacts with the cognate tRNA but also responds to the noncognate tRNA in the crystal structure. However, the binding mode is different in the MD simulations. The specific groups of amino acid residues from the surface loop of the enzyme vary with the tRNA in the crystal. The flexibility of E.c. aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase in the crystal is related to the specific tRNA in the crystal. To further analyze the reasons for the dynamic interactions between tRNA and aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase, we also calculated the root mean square deviations (RMSDs) of the active sites of the enzyme and the complex structures in the simulations. The results show that the surface loop of the enzyme becomes more flexible in the solution structure than in the crystal structure. In this work, we define the highly rigid or flexible aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase induced by the tRNA in solution, which can better explain the recently reported results of conformational flexibility in the enzyme.Q: Error when filtering object with MetadataFilter for PublishFilterObject I am trying to show the users only if the user's group has a certain value using the MetadataFilter for my partial view.
