1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of producing an acid-functional acrylic resin and to the product obtained. More specifically, this invention relates to a method of producing an acid-functional acrylic resin having two functional groups, one in at least the acrylic polymer and the other in the polymerizable monomers, and to the acid-functional acrylic resin obtained. 2. Description of the Prior Art The recent development of high-speed information processing techniques and the widespread use of portable information terminals have led to an increasing demand for techniques which render highly functional the components and the elements forming the terminal, such as, for example, display members and casings. In addition, a variety of techniques have been studied, with an aim of developing materials for imparting properties of non-inflammability, antifogging property, water repellency, oil repellency, slipperiness, antistatic property, surface hardness and resistance to abrasion. In view of the above, much attention has been paid to an acrylic resin. Its properties, especially its excellent moldability, transparency and weatherability, have led to its widespread application as a base resin for producing optical fibers, display members, protective films, weather-resistant members, sliding materials and the like. However, acrylic resins are by no means resistant to acids and alkalis, and hence, in applications where they are exposed to acid or alkali in an environment, they may undergo gradual degradation. In particular, in applications in which they come in contact with a strong acid and/or alkali, such as in the fields of waste water treatment, oil refining and deep-sea fishing, in which the resin components are exposed to a strong acid and/or alkali, the resin itself gradually deteriorates and may thus lose its applications. To address this issue, the following method has been proposed. That is, a method is proposed which, in a case where an acrylic polymer is used as a base resin, comprises, in its composition, a polymer having at least one selected from the group consisting of a carboxyl group and a hydroxyl group, and a polymerizable monomer having an acid-functional group and further, where an addition reaction of the hydroxyl group and the carboxyl group takes place, preventing generation of free carboxylic acid (Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (Kokai) No. 11-4724). This method is capable of preventing the deterioration of the resin

Q: Get Sum of the Items of a List I am wondering if there is a way to retrieve the sum of a list of items using an expression rather than creating a lambda expression or LINQ. I am using an ExpressionTree that is null and I want to sum all the items in a list and convert this into a double. Is this possible? A: I assume you are asking how to do it in the UI code-behind. If that's the case, then you can use the expression extension method from PLINQ. Add the following reference to your project: using System.Linq.Expressions; and then do something like this: myList.Add(2); myList.Add(3); var sum = myList.Sum(x => x); Note that you can also use this: (myList.Sum() + myList.Count()); or even: (((double) myList.Sum()) / myList.Count()); Former Women's World Cup champion Hope Solo was taken into police custody by the LAPD on Sunday.
