"Every parent should put their child on bedtime rotation," says Drew Holzman, author of The Ultimate Teen Bedtime Guide. As your child goes through the phases of sleeping, parents should try to put their teen in the same sleeping arrangement until they're ready to sleep in their own bed, Holzman says. The best way to help your teenager sleep is to build the habit early in life, so it's ingrained before the teen starts to get what he or she is going to get. "When you walk in on a 16-year-old and he's fumbling with the covers trying to get in bed, that's not because he really wants to sleep," Holzman says. "It's because he's just learned the behavior, and the rules, from the other bedtime." Synthetic and genetic approaches to determining the function of the yeast YAR1 gene encoding a putative cell wall polymer. YAR1, a gene encoding a putative yeast cell wall polymer involved in bud septation, has been identified and the sequence determined. By integration of the wild-type yar1 allele into a cell wall mutant it was established that YAR1 is involved in cell wall synthesis. A synthetic double mutant was constructed that contained both yar1 and an allele of GET1, a gene involved in the regulation of cell wall synthesis. The double mutant exhibited an abnormality in the cell surface hydrophobicity and morphology indicating that YAR1 is involved in some aspect of cell wall synthesis. A possible role for YAR1 in the assembly of beta-glucan in the cell wall was investigated by the construction of a new mutant strain
