Count the Number of Arithmetical Number that are Perfect Squares Given is a Collection of Prime Numbers p_i which we denote as P. For every Prime $p_i \in P$ we now have another Collection Q_i, which contains all the numbers we can make from $\{1, \dots, p_i\}$ and are also Perfect Squares. We also have a Collection $\mathcal{N}_i$ which counts the number of such Arithmetical Numbers (I'll give the definition below), that is an element of Q_i, for each Prime $p_i \in P$. Now, I want to know, how is it possible to formulate an algorithm that tells me approximately how many numbers belong to Q_i, for each $p_i \in P$. The only thing I know at the moment is that the size of $\mathcal{N}_i$ is of order $O(log_{p_i}\sqrt{p_i})$. In general, we cannot approximate the size of any Collection in a better way, right? A: Well, since you say a Prime p is used n times, let's call it a factor of n. As the case you want is the case where n is even, we may assume that for primes p_i this is $2m$ for some 648931e174
