TradingView is an online Stock Market Trading Advisor, available in application programming interfaces, for everyone interested in the industry. It provides data on more than 100 trading or investment charts, such as stocks, the currency market, commodities, bonds, etc. While viewing charts, you can request different information, such as market depth, depth of the order book, volume and price of data, amongst others. All this information is available under simple navigation of either volume or price. The data is published, for free, by the second largest exchange after NYSE, and is drawn from a wide array of liquidity providers, most of which are free. What are the main advantages of this platform? Several features come in handy:

- TradingView is an excellent place to test strategies on real data, without having to pay for or buy this data. It is made for all kinds of traders, from day traders to experts, as its interface is user-friendly and highly configurable.
- You can easily view all your data for free. Before using it, you can evaluate your options, what a user is willing to pay or do, and what kind of trader you are. This will help you make the best possible decision.
- You can expand your knowledge. While some trading platforms do not allow you to access historical data, TradingView offers you access to historical prices, market volumes, and market data of nearly every known platform.
- The charting and data tools are top-notch. You can easily view trading data and trends through many popular tools. It is built to be a secure and safe environment, which means that you can access your trading data from any device.
- TradingView has built-in projects, which help you add data and create new trading tools. You can even create your own!
- It is user-friendly, no matter your level of expertise. The platform is designed for casual traders, as well.
- You can use TradingView in a legal manner. There are no rules or legislations, so if you want to trade or use the data, you are perfectly fine with it.
- TradingView gets updated, every day, with more data and tools.
- The best part is the app. It has to be tested. It is simply no good for you, not to mention the traders you are looking to learn from.

TradingView has consistently been No. 1 in its category, on the market share charts, amongst other third-party apps. What TradingView is an easy-to-use charting platform for technical analysis. The app uses data from Bloomberg and Litespeed. The features are extremely easy to use. They are organized into 4 main tabs: on the top side there are Charts tab, Chart page tab, Markets tab, and Settings tab. Charts tab The first one contains all indicators, those with charts, trend lines, technical indicators, etc. You can filter the data by condition, time, and price range. The section also contains all indicators. Chart page tab This tab is very detailed and helpful. It allows you to visualize charts. To do this, you can either toggle with three different options (bars, line, or both) or pick a specific option. This tab has more advanced tools. In this section, you can access the stock page by choosing the stock from your portfolio. You can choose from 28 different chart types. Setting tab The Settings tab has some links that you can configure, like displaying data on the desktop or using the mobile version. TradingView for iOS and Android This app is simple to use. If you already have an account with TradingView, you can import this one. Otherwise, you will have to create a new one. It is free and can be used on multiple devices.
