What's new in Wytchwood:

, Worcestershire Wytchwood is a suburb of Worcester, notable for its park. It is mainly known for its Shire Hall in Bell Street, where Worcestershire County Council was established in 1833, its Literary and Philosophical Institute in Chesterton (off Sheldon Road), and the outdoor radio and television transmitter station at Whitley Wood, north of Witley. Wythywood railway station briefly opened in 1847 when the Great Western Railway promoted it as the new Chelmsford Road railway station on the Malvern to Worcester line. Since the 1950s, Wythywood National Nature Reserve (NNR) has been a major wildlife conservation site run by the New Forest National Park (NFNP). The reserve covers an area of 700ha, which provides supplementary breeding for birds including the barn owl, kestrel, red kite, wood pigeon and fieldfare, and also as a hunting area for white-tailed and muntjac deer. The site is also a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) and a Special Protection Area and part of the site is a recognised national park of internationally significant value. History The land as it is today is mainly known for its two universities, Worcester, which is located in the north of Witley Common in Wychwood, and the adjacent University of Birmingham which was established in the south of the Common in 1904. Each university runs its own teaching hospital: the former University of Worcester Specialised Aneurysm and Arterial Ischaemia Service (AIS) hospital, and the later University Hospitals Bristol NHS Foundation Trust Greater Gloucestershire AIS and Bristol A&E, and now University Hospital of the West Midlands, AIS. Due to the joint hospitals run jointly by the two universities, Wythenshawe Hospital, originally based in the north-east corner of the present Witley Common site, is now commonly known as the Wythenshawe Hospital. Witley Common has also been the location of many large public houses such as the Old Crown (formerly known as Crown House) and the Eaton Arms. The city's third major racecourse, the current Taaffe Park circuit, has also been built on the site of Chester House, south-west of Witley Common. Chester House was founded in the mid 17th century for Sir William Taaffe, the Catholic cousin of Queen Elizabeth I. The suburbs of the northern part of Witley Common (Worcester
