Field of the Invention This invention relates to a static cling adhesive; more specifically, a static cling adhesive specifically designed to adhere to plastic or fabric, and the subsequent release of the plastic or fabric. The adhesive also works with wire, various plastics, polystyrene foam, plastic coated fabrics, etc. 2. Description of the Related Art Static cling adhesives are well known. They adhere well to various surfaces when rubbed, and release when rubbed. They may be found on permanent adhesive tape and many other products. However, they have limited uses. For instance, static cling adhesives are not effective on fabrics, clothing, etc. Since most clothing is made of fabric, and most fabrics are made of a material with a static charge, the static cling adhesives cannot effectively adhere to clothing, etc. Many types of adhesives known in the art, even those having a microadhesive, often stick to clothing, bags, etc. and are unable to release easily. Such adhesives can be messy and are more cumbersome to use. Furthermore, they are easily blocked by dirt and other materials which can accumulate on clothing, bags, etc. Some adhesives known in the art require very specific properties of the substrate to which the adhesive is being applied. They must be extremely thin and conform to sharp edges and irregular surfaces. Since most adhesive tapes and the like are more than an inch or two thick, they cannot be used in all situations. The art lacks an adhesive that can stick to plastic, fabrics and other materials and release easily. The present invention is specifically designed to work with a wide variety of substrates, including plastic, paper, fabrics, etc. This invention gives static cling adhesives a wide variety of uses. This invention can be used as a sticker, heat transfer label, temporary glue, adhesive, window cling, etc. The invention can be used on any flat substrate such as, but not limited to: plastic, polystyrene, styrofoam, packaging, paper, cardboard, etc. The invention can be used on 0cc13bf012
