The prior art in this area is exemplified in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,945,673, 4,767,251, 6,237,798 and 6,237,799. As can be seen, conventional grills are usually large and stationary making it difficult to organize and/or transport the device to a desired location or place. Attempts to solve this problem have usually resulted in a device that carries some of the wheels with the grill. These devices have usually resulted in a difficulty to carry the device when it is not in use. Typically, the grill has a large basket and many wheels carried by the basket. The large basket provides insufficient storage and the wheels may slide to one side of the basket when the grill is carried thereby so that the grill is unstable and cannot be freely maneuvered. A second problem has been the lack of easy access to the grill when using the grill with people cooking. Conventional grills are difficult to access and even when in contact with a table the grills are difficult to access. A key area for improvements has been the control of grease. Conventional grills rely on a drip pan to catch the grease. When the grease falls into the pan there is a difficulty in cleaning the grease from the pan. In addition, larger amounts of grease drip than can be readily cleaned from the pan so that a dirty pan becomes full of grease. A grease contained overflow when cooking sausages with grease and when cooking other food that will drip grease and this has resulted in grease covering all of the outside area around the grill. It is an objective of the present invention to provide an improved portable grill that overcomes the problem of not being able to move freely along the ground when not in use. It is another object of this invention to provide an improved grill which allows easier access to the grill when using the grill. A further objective of this invention is to provide a grill that overcomes the problem of grease spillage. It is yet another objective of this invention to provide a grill that is easily cleaned of grease.Q: Searching for "Hall" in a Git repository causes Debian repository
