[Laparoscopic gastrectomy for early gastric cancer: comparison of operative and postoperative results between transabdominal and retroperitoneal approaches]. We retrospectively compared the clinical results of transabdominal approach (TA) (n=18) and retroperitoneal approach (RPA) (n=15) for operative treatment of early gastric cancer. The background of operative technique was to reduce the invasiveness of open gastrectomy. The patients underwent laparoscopic surgery (LPS) with TA or RPA, truncal vagotomy and pyloroplasty. The patients were divided into TA group and RPA group, and they were compared regarding the operative and postoperative results. The patients in TA group were two of three patients with distal gastric cancer and one of five patients with subcardial gastric cancer. The patients in RPA group were three of six patients with proximal gastric cancer and two of six patients with subcardial gastric cancer. The types of gastrectomy in TA group and RPA group were distal gastrectomy in 16 and 15 and proximal gastrectomy in two and three, respectively. The mean size of the rese
