"The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey" still holds the record for most expensive cinema-bound 3D film, with a reported $80m budget for the production. However, one imagines that that doesn't take account of the $80m that "The Hobbit" cost to make. He is taking his time with "The Hobbit 2," thus allowing the jumble of pre-production to work out its kinks and giving himself the luxury of waiting until the "very last week" to shoot. Jackson says his team were shooting on nine or ten cameras at any one time during the Hobbit shoots. Said the director, via /Film: "We had nine or ten cameras on a gimbal doing rapid fire... You have a whole team of technical wizards behind that who work very fast. "The problem is that if you have a complicated shot, it can take up to 30 minutes to do. Sometimes the best way to approach it is to block it out. When we were shooting 'The Lord of the Rings' we were able to shoot every sequence with no problems. "There's a nice rhythm to it. You start at 6 a.m. and you shoot until 4 p.m. or 5 p.m. and at that point you head off. You try to do the other sequences, but then you need a couple of days to do the legs. One of the things about a film like 'The Lord of the Rings' was you could shoot the mountain of 'The Return of the King' and
